Index to Volume 38 (2002)

Adventures in Pornographic Places: Eliza Haywood's Tea-Table and the Decentering of Moral Argument, by Alexander Pettit, 244.

Alienated, Betrayed, and Powerless: A Possible Connection Between Charlotte Temple and the Legend of Inkle and Yarico, by Steven Epley, 200.

Animals and Birds in Philip Larkin's Poetry, by Roger Craik, 395.

ARMBRUSTER, KARLA, "Good Dog": The Stories We Tell about Our Canine Companions and What They Mean for Humans and Other Animals, 351.

BARRON, PATRICK, The Separation of Wild Animal Nature and Human Nature in Gilgamesh: Roots of a Contemporary Theme, 377.

Beastly Desire: Human/Animal Inteeractions in Lawrence's Women in Love, by Andrew Howe, 429.

BIDNEY, MARTIN, The Secretive-Playful Epiphanies of Robert Frost: Solitude, Companionship, and the Ambivalent Imagination, 270.

"Biheste is dette": Marriage Promises in Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, by Marie Nelson, 167.

The "Brute" Part in Hamlet and Julius Caesar Refigured—Regally, by Robert F. Fleissner, 334.

BURNS, ALLAN, Extensions of Vision: The Representation of Non-Human Points of View, 339.

CARTLIDGE, NEIL, "The Only Objective Novel Ever Written"? Arnold Bennett's Riceyman Steps, 115.

CRAIK, ROGER, Animals and Birds in Philip Larkin's Poetry, 395.

Cullen, Keats, and the Privileged Liar, by David E. Goldweber, 29.

A Darkness Pulled Out of Us: Stanley Plumly and the Elegy of Relationship, by Bryan Walpert, 227.

The Devils in the Details: The Role of Evil in the Short Fiction of Nikolai Vasilievich Gogol and Nathaniel Hawthorne, by Derek Maus, 76.

THOMAS DILWORTH, Narrator of "Bartleby": The Christian-Humanist Acquaintance of John Jacob Astor, 49.

Elegy Unto Epitaph: Print Culture and Commemorative Practice in Gray's "Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard," by Michele Turner Sharp, 3.

EPLEY, STEVEN, Alienated, Betrayed, and Powerless: A Possible Connection Between Charlotte Temple and the Legend of Inkle and Yarico, 200.

Extensions of Vision: The Representation of Non-Human Points of View, by Allan Burns, 339.

Index to Volume 38 (2002)

Adventures in Pornographic Places: Eliza Haywood's Tea-Table and the Decentering of Moral Argument, by Alexander Pettit, 244.

Alienated, Betrayed, and Powerless: A Possible Connection Between Charlotte Temple and the Legend of Inkle and Yarico, by Steven Epley, 200.

Animals and Birds in Philip Larkin's Poetry, by Roger Craik, 395.

ARMBRUSTER, KARLA, "Good Dog": The Stories We Tell about Our Canine Companions and What They Mean for Humans and Other Animals, 351.

BARRON, PATRICK, The Separation of Wild Animal Nature and Human Nature in Gilgamesh: Roots of a Contemporary Theme, 377.

Beastly Desire: Human/Animal Inteeractions in Lawrence's Women in Love, by Andrew Howe, 429.

BIDNEY, MARTIN, The Secretive-Playful Epiphanies of Robert Frost: Solitude, Companionship, and the Ambivalent Imagination, 270.

"Biheste is dette": Marriage Promises in Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, by Marie Nelson, 167.

The "Brute" Part in Hamlet and Julius Caesar Refigured—Regally, by Robert F. Fleissner, 334.

BURNS, ALLAN, Extensions of Vision: The Representation of Non-Human Points of View, 339.

CARTLIDGE, NEIL, "The Only Objective Novel Ever Written"? Arnold Bennett's Riceyman Steps, 115.

CRAIK, ROGER, Animals and Birds in Philip Larkin's Poetry, 395.

Cullen, Keats, and the Privileged Liar, by David E. Goldweber, 29.

A Darkness Pulled Out of Us: Stanley Plumly and the Elegy of Relationship, by Bryan Walpert, 227.

The Devils in the Details: The Role of Evil in the Short Fiction of Nikolai Vasilievich Gogol and Nathaniel Hawthorne, by Derek Maus, 76.

THOMAS DILWORTH, Narrator of "Bartleby": The Christian-Humanist Acquaintance of John Jacob Astor, 49.

Elegy Unto Epitaph: Print Culture and Commemorative Practice in Gray's "Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard," by Michele Turner Sharp, 3.

EPLEY, STEVEN, Alienated, Betrayed, and Powerless: A Possible Connection Between Charlotte Temple and the Legend of Inkle and Yarico, 200.

Extensions of Vision: The Representation of Non-Human Points of View, by Allan Burns, 339.

Fleissner, Robert F., The "Brute" Part in Hamlet and Julius Caesar Refigured—Regally, 334.
Going, William T., Nota Brevis Inter Actus, 442.
Goldweber, David E., Cullen, Keats, and the Privileged Liar, 29.
"Good Dog": The Stories We Tell about Our Canine Companions and What They Mean for Humans and Other Animals, by Karla Armbruster, 351.
Howe, Andrew, Beastly Desire: Human/Animal Interactions in Lawrence's Women in Love, 429.
"It is All a Darkness": Death, Narrative Therapy, and Ford Madox Ford's The Good Soldier, by Kenneth Womack, 316.
Maus, Derek, The Devils in the Details: The Role of Evil in the Short Fiction of Nikolai Vasilievich Gogol and Nathaniel Hawthorne, 76.
Narrator of "Bartleby": The Christian-Humanist Acquaintance of John Jacob Astor, by Thomas Dilworth, 49.
Nelson, Marie, "Biheste is dette": Marriage Promises in Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, 167.
Nota Brevis Inter Actus, by William T. Going, 442.
"The Only Objective Novel Ever Written"? Arnold Bennett's Riceyman Steps, by Neil Cartlidge, 115.
Payne, Kenneth, "Then Something Snapped Inside Me": The Psychiatrist as Noir Protagonist in John Franklin Bardin's The Deadly Percheron (1946), 295.
Pettit, Alexander, Adventures in Pornographic Places: Eliza Haywood's Tea-Table and the Decentering of Moral Argument, 244.
Resisting Metaphor: John Hawkes's Sweet William: A Memoir of Old Horse, by Julie Ann Smith, 413.
The Secretive-Playful Epiphanies of Robert Frost: Solitude, Companionship, and the Ambivalent Imagination, by Martin Bidney, 270.
The Separation of Wild Animal Nature and Human Nature in Gilgamesh: Roots of a Contemporary Theme, by Patrick Barron, 377.
Sharp, Michele Turner, Elegy Unto Epitaph: Print Culture and Commemorative Practice in Gray's "Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard," 3.
Smith, Julie Ann, Resisting Metaphor: John Hawkes's Sweet William: A Memoir of Old Horse, 413.
"Then Something Snapped Inside Me": The Psychiatrist as Noir Protagonist in John Franklin Bardin's The Deadly Percheron (1946), by Kenneth Payne, 295.
"'Tis Pity That When Laws Are Faulty They Should Not Be Mended or Abolisht": Authority, Legitimation, and Honor in Aphra Behn's The Widdow Ranter, by Aspasia Velissariou, 137.
Velissariou, Aspasia, "'Tis Pity That When Laws Are Faulty They Should Not Be Mended or Abolisht": Authority, Legitimation, and Honor in Aphra Behn's The Widdow Ranter, 137.

WALPERT, BRYAN, A Darkness Pulled Out of Us: Stanley Plumly and the Elegy of Relationship, 227.
WOMACK, KENNETH, "It is All a Darkness": Death, Narrative Therapy, and Ford Madox Ford's The Good Soldier, 316.